

INTRODUCING

WOMENSWEAR >

Bernadette

Founded in Antwerp by mother-daughter design duo Bernadette and Charlotte De Geyter, Bernadette has quirky elegance down to a tee. Bold prints, jewel tones and luxe fabrics add a playfulness to clean lines and timeless silhouettes. And while silk mididresses are the label's signature, don't overlook the relaxed tailoring and sleek separates: this is day-to-night dressing at its most glamorous. Top £430 and skirt £450

MENSWEAR >

Nanushka

The contemporary womenswear from Nanushka has been striking a chord with male fashionistas for years – and Budapest-based designer Sandra Sandor has finally taken the hint. Her new menswear line reimagines the brand's signature vintage-bohemian minimalism with stylish, functional clothes for the modern man. Look out for artfully faded shirts and lightweight sweaters, perfect for those evenings when it starts to get just a little chilly on that far-flung beach. From left Shirts £240 and £200, and sweater £310

BEAUTY

Helena Rubinstein

The year 1902 saw the arrival of one of the first moisturising creams. It was invented by cosmetics pioneer Helena Rubinstein, who called upon a raft of scientists in her quest to provide the best skincare treatments, centred around innovative research and technologies. And you can now see what everyone's raving about by visiting the Hair & Beauty Salon.

INTERIORS

Chilewich x John Derian

Having collected 18th- and 19th-century art from a young age, John Derian duly developed an obsession with print. He opened his own studio in New York in 1989, and there, with a small team of artisans, he creates tableware referencing his vast collection of antique prints. His seven-piece range of tabletop textiles created with producer Chilewich includes placemats and runners that evoke the colours and vibrancy of spring, using illustrations of flora and fauna, and a rainbow of coloured shapes. From £47.50
